TRADE: Building cadet

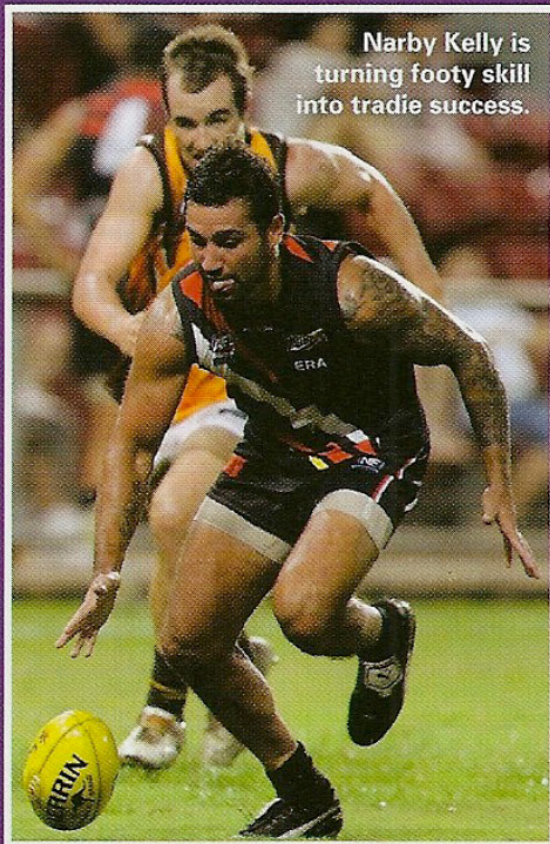

NYABURU "NARBY" KELLY is a star of the NT Thunder squad. Now his talent on the footie field has earned him a flying start in a beautiful new cadetship program.

AFL National property group ISIS has formed a partnership with AFL Northern Territory (AFLNT) and created a new cadetship program for indigenous young people.

Narby Kelly is the first to receive the cadetship. He started full time work with ISIS a few months back. "It's an opportunity for our company to provide an individual with a chance that they otherwise would never receive," says Darren Milchman, the Executive Manager of People Strategies at ISIS.

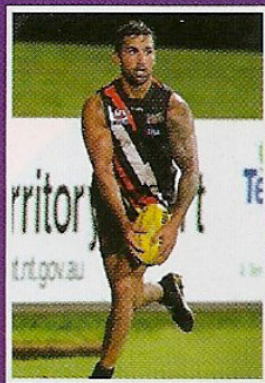

Starting as a building cadet, Narby will have the opportunity to learn about ISIS from scratch, with a long-term career potential in any office around Australia. "Narby will work in one of our teams and spend time in different areas of the business, so he learns everything we do," Darren Milchman says. "He will learn about site administration, assist in coordinating projects, and work alongside our project managers and will receive full exposure of everything we do here."

Cameron Roberts of the AFLNT nominated Narby for the cadetship.

"He has such a strong work ethic, and I knew he had the passion for the job," he says. "He has drive that makes him the perfect candidate."
