

Environmental Policy

At ISIS, we believe the property industry should be leading the way to create a more environmentally sustainable Australia. We know that sustainable office environments are beneficial for our employees and we will work with our clients to incorporate environmental initiatives on the projects we deliver for them.

Through our commitment to continually improve our environmental performance and our aim to become a truly sustainable business, we gain the experience and knowledge to share with the wider industry and also influence it to incorporate a greater level of sustainability.

To achieve this aim we will:

- Create a culture that integrates environmental principles into the company's strategic decision making processes.
- Work with clients, architects, designers and consultants to promote sustainability as an integral part of each project.
- Encourage better environmental practises among the suppliers and subcontractors we engage by including environmental performance in their selection criteria.
- Have meaningful objectives and targets that address our environmental impacts.
- Minimise the generation of waste, and the use of energy, water and resources by our business activities.
- Prevent pollution from ISIS operations by identifying and managing those activities that have the potential to contaminate the environment.
- Ensure that employees across the organisation receive appropriate environmental training and are proficient in managing their environmental responsibilities.
- Meet all legal requirements relevant to our business operations and certify our environmental management system to the international ISO14001 standard.

Underpinning our aim to become an environmentally sustainable business, we will demonstrate to the property industry that sustainability makes good business sense, both for ISIS and our clients.
